A ship's crew in a panic from fear of wreck or fire is one of the most under which human nature can be has been lost which might otherwise have been saved, through the called "panie." There is only one remedy for it, and wise commanders know it-give everybody someto working at the pumps, others to launching the boats, others to packing and stowing away provisions, and frightened women to dressing sults. and preparing children. Then, if ship may be saved.

Tennessee is a ship in great straits, and her crew are at present, to say the least, demoralized, if not in a state of panic, but the ship is still seaworthy, and if a wise captain everyone to work, she may yet be

We absolutely refuse to believe that those who supported Mr. Wilson in the late canvass, and have been elected on his ticket, intended throwing the state into the hands of as follows: the republican party. We cannot conceive of them as satisfied with the accession of that party to predominance in Tennessee politics, especially with a republican representation of our state in the national senate. Nobody can now be blind to the fact that this can only be prevented by the steady co-operation of all who are not republicans in the present legislature. One thing alone can be urged against this-the impossibility of those acting together who were divided in the recent contest by their conflict of opinion about the state debt. Surely this can be no longer an operative cause. If a question was ever thoroughly canvassed in a state, and decided by an overwhelming majority, that is true of our debt question in Tennessee. The chief cause of the democratic defeat in Shelby county was due to the demoralization incident to a radical difference of opinion respecting the payment of the state debt. A very large number of democratare firm supporters of Wilson's repudiating policy. Strange as it now seems, the democratic managers believed that a democratic iegislative ticket could be elected, without the candidates taking sides on so important a question as the election of a state-credit governor or a repudiating governor. A mixed ticket was therefore put in the field, some of the candidates known to be Wilson men, and others as Wright men. After their nomination these candidates carefully abstained from any violent expressions of arouse party enthusiasm for a fickel that repudlated the democratic platform. General apathy not only prevalled in democratic circles but general disgust also, to so great an extent that large numbers of democrats voted for the republican candidates. This universal apathy and disgust not only aided in the defeat of the legislative ticket, but it proved a potent influence in the defeat of the democratic candidate for congress in the county. The managers said, in effect, that "We have kicked over the democratic platform, but dash the principles, this is the democratic party, anyhow, so vote the ticket." It is possible that the managers are now prepared to admit that there are some men in the democratic party who cannot be led by a party label, with the principles lopped off.
